Do's and Don'ts for Dating After Divorce

With Valentine's Day just a few weeks away, the media is bombarding us all with ads for candy, flowers, jewelry and gifts. So it makes sense that we are all a little more focused on love these days. But as someone recently divorced or just getting back into the dating scene after a long break, you might naturally feel some anxiety or confusion about what to do in our ever-changing world. Here are a few quick tips to help you get back on track if you are interested in rejuvenating your love life:

Daniel J. Lee, MBA

Financial Advisor

Navigon Financial Group, Inc.

I got into the financial industry because I wanted to help people, help my clients realize their financial goals and dreams. Prior to serving as a Financial Advisor, I started my career as a Clinical Pharmacist at Duke Hospital.

While practicing pharmacy at the hospital, I also earned my MBA at Duke, and then transitioned to the pharmaceutical industry. I helped bring new and innovative drugs to market serving in various capacities in marketing and sales, while helping to create wealth for the shareholders. All the while, I still had the desire to help individual people, and when I was asked to get into the financial industry, I jumped at the opportunity. As a pharmacist, I enjoyed helping to take care of patients' medical health, and now as a Financial Advisor, I enjoy helping to take care of clients' financial health.

Being mindful of the lessons I had learned as a Pharmacist, one of which is to care for the whole person rather than treating a single lab result, I take a similar approach as a Financial Advisor. Rather than a single transactional investment, I help my clients and their families realize a greater sense of financial security. As families go through different life events from the cradle to the grave, I cultivate a trusting relationship and take a holistic approach; taking into account the clients' best interest while factoring in their time horizon, risk tolerance, and performance expectations to help them fully realize their financial goals and dreams for the short- as well as the long-term.
